Record of Protected Structures

The Record of Protected Structures for Clonakilty has been carried out in accordance with the guidelines of Duchas, The Heritage Service. The guidelines of the National Inventory of Architectural Heritage and the Architectural Heritage Protection Division have been consulted in the preparation of the Clonakilty RPS.

Each planning authority is required to compile and maintain a Record of Protected Structures for its functional area. A Record of Protected Structures is a mechanism available for the statutory protection of the architectural heritage. A planning authority must include in the Record every structure which, in its opinion, is of special architectural, historical, archaeological, artistic, cultural, scientific, social or technical interest. The Record of Protected Structures forms part of the development plan. Planning authorities should ensure that its content is clearly set out to facilitate consultation by its officers and the general public.

The planning authority should identify whether a structure has one or more of the characteristics of special interest prescribed under the 2000 Act. If such characteristics of special interest has been identified, the planning authority should include that structure in its Record of Protected Structures. The same characteristics of special interest are prescribed for Architectural Conservation Areas in the Act.

Categories of Special Interest:

- Architectural
- Historical
- Archaeological
- Artistic
- Cultural
- Scientific
- Technical
- Social

In relation to a protected structure or proposed protected structure, the meaning of the term structure includes the interior of the structure lying within that curtilage and their interiors, all fixtures and features which form part of the interior or exterior of that structure. The protection also extends to any features specified as being in the attendant grounds. (The Architectural Heritage Protection - Guidelines for Planning Authorities)

The Record of Protected Structures should not to be taken as a mechanism that freezes selected buildings in time. It is important to find new uses for old buildings so that these structures will survive for future generations to enjoy and appreciate, RPS status is attributed to a structure to protect and ensure due consideration is given to the elements and fabric which are of architectural heritage significance. The owner of a protected structure may apply for a declaration from the planning authority which details what works would and would not require planning permission.

'If adequate historical, pictorial or physical documentation exist so that a missing element may be accurately reproduced it could be considered desirable to re-establish the element as part of the building's historical appearance rather than design an alternative one'. (Reinstated over 2001) This is particularly relevant in the case of uPVC windows and inappropriate dormer additions that generally affect the character of a building and consequently the streetscape. It is hoped that altered or missing elements such as timber sash windows and traditional rooflines can be reinstated overtime as they require replacement.

Street furniture is a particularly vulnerable group within the Record of Protected Structures. Street furniture is often not recognised for the significant contribution that it makes to the unique character of a town. Many street features are badly maintained and poorly presented.

It is important to afford protection to these structures and ensure their survival. In instances where it is not possible to afford protection to street features in their existing context it may be necessary to relocate these structures within the town.

'Standard solutions cannot be applied to the problems of historic buildings. Nor can old buildings be expected to perform in the same way as modern buildings in terms of structural strength, durability of materials or thermal insulation'. (The Architectural Heritage Protection - Guidelines for Planning Authorities) Particular consideration must be given in Clonakilty to buildings which are affected by flood damages, as creative solutions will be required to address this issue. After fire, water is the greatest threat to a historical building. Each building within the flood zone should be considered on a case-by-case basis to reach a satisfactory solution.

Guidelines for Planning Authorities)

Detached gable-fronted former Presbyterian church, built 1861, now in use as a post office. Three-stage tower to the south-east corner with ashlar broach spire. Pitched slate roof with cast-iron ridge cresting. Dressed sandstone walls having buttresses to corners and to tower. Pointed arch openings with ashlar sandstone dressings, some hood mouldings and carved bosses. Paired and triple windows with trefoils and quatro foils above.

DATE	1855 -1865	CONDITION	Good
-------------	------------	------------------	------

APPRAISAL

This former Presbyterian church is a well-designed and well-articulated example of architectural design in Ireland in the latter part of the nineteenth century. The pointed arch openings, hood mouldings and fine tower are representative of the Gothic revival style that was popular at that time. The building is an interesting reminder of the religious diversity which was associated with Clonakilty and forms part of an interesting group with the Church of Ireland, Roman Catholic and Methodist churches. The church was occupied by the Department of Posts and Telegraphs in 1924.

DATE 1815 -1820 CONDITION Good

APPRAISAL

Built in the early nineteenth century by the Earl of Shannon, this former linen hall is an interesting reminder of the industrial history of the town. The linen hall was built as a centre for the buying and selling of the locally produced linen. Linen was an important part of the local economy from the mid eighteenth century to the mid nineteenth century, and was at its peak in the first part of the nineteenth century, with six hundred weavers recorded in the town. By 1833 the linen industry in the town had declined and less than one hundred and fifty weavers were noted in Clonakilty.

DATE 1825 -1830 CONDITION Good

APPRAISAL

Designed by George Richard Pain, this building is similar to other Munster courthouses designed by the architect in the first part of the nineteenth century. The building was burned during Civil War and retains bullet holes from that troubled period on the east façade. The remains of the former gaol to the rear of the building contributes to the site and context of the building. The ashlar sandstone utilized in the construction of this building contrasts with the render facades in the town. The ashlar was clearly executed by skilled stone carvers and masons, and the building is enhanced by the retention of notable features, including the Venetian window and pediments.

APPRAISAL

This fine building is an interesting addition to the architectural heritage of Clonakilty. The subtle architectural details of the building, including the breakfront end bays, and recessed panels are notable features of the building. Built on the grounds of Scartagh Cottage, the convent was founded in 1856. The chapel which was designed by Ashlin and Pugin, prolific architects to the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, is an unusual building in their portfolio, as it is in the Romanesque style rather than their favoured Gothic idiom. The burial ground and chimneystack are interesting features in the site of the convent.

Timber sliding sash windows to upper floors. Ground floor altered and fixed windows, doors and shopfronts inserted. Single-bay building adjoining to the west and two-bay building adjoining to the north.

DATE 1800 -1840 CONDITION Good

APPRAISAL

The chamfered corner is an interesting feature of the building which addresses the corner site location of the building. Set at the junction of five streets, this building occupies a notable position in the urban landscape. This house is in keeping with the three-storey scale of many of the buildings along the main thoroughfares in the town, and this imposing scale contributes to the unique character of Clonakilty. The multiple-pane timber sliding sash windows enhance the significance of the building.

DATE 1780 - 1820 CONDITION Good

APPRAISAL

This former market house and town hall played a significant role in the economic and social development of Clonakilty. Built on the site of a seventeenth century market house, this site was the centre of civic activity in the town from the first part of the seventeenth century to the mid twentieth century. The pedimented breakfront and round-headed openings are distinctive features of the building which are indicative of its former function.

The decorative render detail, such as the pedimented architraves and quoins, enlivens and enhances the regular façade of this building. The carved timber shopfront is a particularly notable feature which adds artistic interest to the streetscape. The high quality carved detail of this shopfront is unusual in Clonakilty as most of the shopfronts in the town are relatively simple in execution. The decorative details of this building were clearly executed by skilled craftsmen and would be difficult to replicate.

Pointed arch door openings with paired timber matchboard doors having wrought-iron strap hinges. Wrought-iron railings and gates to site with ashlar limestone plinths and piers. Burial ground to site.

DATE 1870 -1890 CONDITION Good

APPRAISAL

Designed by George Ashlin in the Gothic revival style, this church is a significant addition to the architectural heritage of Clonakilty. Ashlin designed many buildings with Pugin, and together were prolific architects to the Roman Catholic church in Ireland during the latter part of the nineteenth century. The irregular form of the building and pinnacles, finials and spire contrast with the traditional form of the buildings in the surrounding area. Skilled masons and craftsmen were clearly involved in the execution of this fine building. The interior of the church retains many notable features, such as the high altar by G. O'Connor, apse decoration by Hodkinsons of Limerick and stained glass by Mayer. Cork contractor, John Sisk was involved in the construction of the building. The cast-iron railings and gates which were added at a later date contribute to the setting of the church.

This post box is representative of late nineteenth-century cast-iron post boxes in Ireland. Today, contemporary post boxes are generally plastic and often replace the distinctive cast-iron box. It is important to afford protection to these cast-iron boxes, as they are no longer in production. It is interesting to note the changes in the decorative detail of cast-iron post boxes from Victorian times to the latter part of the twentieth century.

APPRAISAL

Located on a hill overlooking the town, this building occupies a dominant position in the urban landscape. Set on the north-east corner of the site, this church was built on the site of a seventeenth century church. The grave markers and chest tombs add artistic and historical interest to the site. The Earl of Cork built the first church on this site in the seventeenth-century. That church was replaced in the early nineteenth century, and the existing building may contain fabric of the earlier structure.

ADDITIONAL USE	Public house, eating/drinking establishment, commercial

DESCRIPTION

Terraced former pair of two-bay two-storey houses, built c. 1820, now in use as four-bay house and public house. Pitched slate roof with rendered chimneystacks. Rendered walls. Timber sliding windows to first floor. Carved timber shopfront comprising of carved pilasters with consoles, fascia and entablature above. Pair timber panelled door with toplights and fixed windows to ground floor. Retaining interior features

-------------	------------	------------------	------

APPRAISAL

The survival of the traditional public house interior makes this building a significant contributor to the architectural heritage of Clonakilty and Cork county. The carved timber shopfront is a notable feature of this building that was clearly executed by skilled craftsmen and adds artistic interest to the streetscape. Shopfronts such as this one are becoming increasingly rare in urban landscape and are often threaten by modern replacement.

DESCRIPTION

Pair of two-bay three-storey houses, built c. 1890, now also in use as offices. Pitched slate roof with rendered chimneystack and cast-iron rooflights. Red brick walls having raised render quoins and brick detailings to some ground floor openings. Replacement uPVC windows (unsuitable) and shopfront inserted to ground floor. Two-storey bay to the west

DATE 1870 -1910 CONDITION Good

APPRAISAL

The scale and form of this pair is in keeping with the imposing three-storey scale of many of the buildings along the main thoroughfares in Clonakilty. The red brick utilized in the construction of this pair is a particularly notable feature in the streetscape, as brick was not traditionally utilized in the town and contrasts with the predominantly render facades.
